

“As all of us essential workers continue to get up every day and go to work at the hospital as we usually do while the rest of the world hunkers down at home, loses jobs, wonders about their financial status, I am reminded of my first day of medical school when Dr. Rob Lowe told us we were entering a very special profession, that we would always be needed, and if for some reason our patients couldn't pay they would compensate us somehow.”

Stephanie Feldman, MD, (MED'14)